Doping in Silicon Nano-structures

There is a long standing controversy as to why very small dots of silicon cannot be doped like bulk materials. Our measurements show clearly that the dopants in matrix encapsulated dots occupy regions around the dots and surface defect sites, but not dot interiors.

- Explains inability to dope small dots of silicon.
- Provides hope for doping in small dots of silicon by first cleaning up defective surfaces.